Tea Table Talks

THE MONEY SYMPHONY.

We were dining in a restaurant when our attention was attracted to the leader of the orchestra, a young Hungarian, who was pouring out his very soul on his violin to the strains of "Sampson and Delilah." My companion, one of the most bigoted kind of Americans, for one can be bigoted about one's country as well as anything else, turned to me and said: "I believe those foreigners have something in their lives that many Americans have missed."

"Of course, they have," I replied. "The oft quoted tired business man does not realize what he is missing when he cannot really enjoy good music. Music is essential to most foreigners, and the best part of it is that the world cannot take it from them. Abroad for a few pennies they have a soul satisfying enjoyment that no vaudeville, theater or moving picture show could compare with in this country, and they have it all through the year. In the gardens and parks in the summer, and in the music halls in the winter."

"How few American men really enjoy a symphony concert, yet at a cheap Russian symphony concert the audience was composed of men of different nationalities."

"But there is a kind of symphony that attracts the American man," said my companion smiling. Then taking from his pocket three quarters, he put them on the table in the form of a triangle and laughingly said: "There are many kinds of symphonies, you know, and the money symphony has a merry jingle."

"Yes," I said, "and there is a world of difference between that money symphony represented by your quarters, and the orchestra symphony; and the trouble is, you overplay your part and it ceases to be a merry jingle. You work overtime, from morning until night. Often through the night until the following morning, when you snatch a few hours sleep before beginning another rushing day in search of the dollar."

A physical director in one of our public institutions, who has examined over 2,000 men, says 40 years will be the old age mark for the alien who play that money symphony too hard, for they are all brain and no body.

Too much of anything is bad. If some of the foreigners could absorb a little of the "get up and get" spirit of the American man, some of his virility and strenuousness, it would do them good. While it would do our American men no harm if they could become imbued with a little of the relaxing mellowing influence of the foreigners' love of music.

ABOUT FAINTING.

I know a woman who is very strong and healthy, yet when she heard bad news suddenly she fainted. I have known many people to faint when they hear bad news. I don't know just why it affected them that way.

MRS. KATE G.

One of the several things that cause people to faint is stoppage of blood to certain parts of the brain. When the mind receives a shock as it does when we receive bad news unexpectedly, there is a sudden contraction of the blood vessels. The blood doesn't reach the head, the face grows pale, brain action is suspended because the blood supply is cut off and the weakness we call fainting is the consequence.

Nature tries to right itself by having the fainting person drop to the floor, as the blood reaches the brain more easily when we are lying down than when standing up. This is a good thing to remember should you be called upon to give first aid to a person who faints. Let them lie flat until consciousness returns.

MUST BE PREPARED FOR PREPAREDNESS.

The production of feeble minded children has more than doubled in the United States in the last 10 years.

If this alarming increase continues it will counteract in a large degree the millions on millions of dollars that this nation will spend on preparedness in the way of battleships, submarines and big guns.

Thousands of feeble minded children are suffering from lack of proper care in this country. Half of these little ones die before they reach school age, six years, and those that grow up are weaklings. They make a class that creates a rotten place in the national life. They are not only unfit to fight in an army, but they are so low in vitality that they are unable to feel loyalty, patriotism and love of home. Guns, ships, aeroplanes, and all other implements of war must be operated by human beings, and the first requisite of a successful army is healthy people, well fed and well housed. Germany's success is due to the fact that in that country children are well nourished, child-poverty, as it exists here and in England, being almost unknown there.

Our army officers are already alarmed at the increasing number of undersized, poorly nourished and weak muscled men who apply for enlistment.

Admiral Ross of the United States navy reports that 50 per cent of the men who apply for enlistment in our navy are rejected because they are below the normal physical standard or are mentally and morally undesirable.

All the big guns and battleships in the world will avail us nothing in time of war, if we do not prepare healthy, sturdy, red-blooded men.
